

Clean & Happy Home

MaryAnne Sullivan and Jeanne M. Sibert like to clean

By Mi'cal Harriso

Clean Home, Happy Home

Mother-daughter business duo MaryAnne Sullivan and Jeanne M. Sibert like to clean. More than that, they like to teach their clients how to clean, helping them to keep their lives uncluttered and organized.

The calling to clean runs in the family. Growing up, Sullivan's grandmother worked as a housekeeper for the Catholic Diocese of Sacramento, and her mother also worked in the cleaning business. Sullivan put herself through college by utilizing her housekeeping skills, eventually starting up her own business.

The calling to clean runs in the family.

Sibert grew up working for her mother's business, and when life took her on another career path, as an attorney for the Franchise Tax Board, she still had one foot in the cleaning industry. Soon she realized the desire to focus solely on her passion: helping others achieve their goals.

In 1973 Sullivan started the original business, and in 1995 her daughter became her business partner. In 2010 they established Clear Path Home Keeping.

With an understanding that their clients' goals are diverse, Clear Path Home Keeping works to help them

Jeanne Sibert and MaryAnne Sullivan

accomplish their "home management goals," whether that be helping a senior citizen age in a home without clutter, to assisting people caring for their older parents and are concerned with what to do with all their possessions, or helping newly married couples come up with a reasonable budget.

Sullivan and Sibert run their services based on kindness, consideration and an understanding that many just need a little jumpstart to start a plan for better home organization.

"The home is the most expensive purchase in a person's life," Sibert says. "The home and its contents must be maintained—and with the removal of home economics from the schools, several generations have no knowledge about the basics of how to maintain a home."

With all the cleaning, dusting, mopping, filing, disinfecting and simplifying, Sullivan and Sibert celebrate every positive step their clients make to a clear path.

"We love to celebrate our clients' accomplishments, both big and small, as we help them get back on the path to a clean, organized home," Sibert says.

Looking to the future of the personal cleaning business, Clear Path Home Keeping will continue to provide services that are valuable, caring and personalized, while sharing tips and tricks through various self-help websites, seminars and lectures.

For more information on services provided by Clear Path Homekeeping, call 704-3518 or go to ClearPathHomeKeeping.com